

BROOD, THE STOIC WEAPON

"I've seen my time and it's not today."

For many hakaan, a vision of their death is a joyous experience. For you, it pulled back the curtain on an uncaring and empty universe. If your death day is fixed, then so is every moment leading up to it, and all your experiences and choices along the way are meaningless.

Believing yourself immortal until your death day, you've drifted through life making a living as a gladiator, hired thug, and robber.

What you're in for: An incredibly violent bank robbery in which you had no escape plan to speak of.

Your plea: "My fate is to blame for these crimes, not me. But if my fate leads me to jail, that's as good as anywhere else."

De Caserta's Notes: "No conscience, no remorse, just point them at whatever you want destroyed."

Title: Villain Monologue

"We're all marionettes in the hands of fate. It doesn't really matter whether I kill you or you kill me. Although I happen to know that that last one is not going to happen."

Prerequisite: You gave a monologue to an enemy right before you killed them.

Effect: The first time each game session that you describe your philosophy to an NPC, you gain a hero token. When you make a test to intimidate someone, your absolute certainty gives the roll an extra edge. You can use intimidation during a negotiation.

Complication: Brood Smash!

Your stoic philosophy works pretty well for silently enduring other people's pain, but when you take a punch to the face, you tend to get agitated.

While you are bleeding or winded, your abilities that cost discipline cost one less discipline (minimum 1) if they deal damage, and they cost one more discipline if they don't deal damage.

Learn From a Master Downtime Training (Acquire Ability): Drain (learned from a conduit cellmate)

